The 'new' discourse of the Front National under Marine Le Pen:
A slight change with a big impact

Abstract

In recent years, the Front National, under the leadership of Marine Le Pen, has experienced a political revival. In elections, membership numbers and public opinion polls, the party has made impressive gains. We argue in this article that these gains stem, at least in part, from a strategic repositioning of the party based on a more populist discourse and communication style. Through a content analysis of posts (press releases) on the party's Facebook page from 2013 to 2015, we first highlight that, besides giving the Front National a more presentable image, Marine Le Pen has changed the Front National on two fronts: (1) she has rendered the party's discourse more populist and (2) she has managed to reframe the party's leitmotif of immigration. Second, through quantitative analysis of 'Likes' for each post, we find that this new discourse resonates well with Front National sympathizers.

Introduction

Since Marine Le Pen took over the presidency of the Front National (FN) from her father Jean Marie Le Pen in January 2011, this radical right-wing party has been successful on three fronts: membership (an increase from 22,000 members in January 2011 to 83,000 members in December 2014 (Le Figaro, 2014)), electoral success (in the 2014 and 2015 European, departmental and regional elections, the party recorded its best results ever, winning 24.9%, 25.2% and 27.7% of the popular vote, respectively) and public opinion (e.g. opinion polls show that the percentage of individuals who consider the FN a 'danger' decreased by nearly 20 percentage points from 70% to 50% between 2002 and 2012).¹

How has this unprecedented success been possible? Recent studies have explained the resurgence of the FN in terms of structural conditions such as immigration (e.g. Della Posta, 2013), or the economic crisis (Hewlett, 2012) or changes in the electorate (Mayer, 2013). In this study, we focus on the party's discourse, which we define as a combination of stylistic, rhetorical and ideological elements. Using a 'supply and demand' framework, we argue that subtle changes in the party's discourse (e.g. the renewed populist focus and a reframing of the party's leitmotif immigration) have helped the FN to attract renewed support and to consolidate the backing of old sympathizers. We conduct our argument in two steps. First, using official party documents and press releases, we highlight the (subtle) changes in the party's discourse from Le Pen father to Le Pen daughter.
