NEW ZEALAND'S SUCCESSFUL EXPERIENCE INTRODUCING GST: INFORMATIVE GUIDANCE FOR HONG KONG?

Adrian Sawyer*

At present Hong Kong lives in a Jurassic Park tax world and there is virtually no political or business momentum or will to change it... Whether GST or another form of more broadly-based tax will form part of Hong Kong's future tax landscape remains a highly contentious issue... Thus, contrary to current public opinion, this stasis and opposition to GST in particular and seemingly to tax reform in general is "not the end, it is not even the beginning of the end, it is just the end of the beginning".¹

On the face of it, the New Zealand GST would seem to be the tax policymaker's dream: reliable and unexciting... Yet, New Zealand has the highest reliance on GST/VAT revenues as a percentage of total taxation of any OECD country. The New Zealand GST also taxes the "intouchables" – food, children's clothing, books and medicine, for example.²

The Government of the Hong Kong Special Administrative Region (HKSAR) proposed a goods and services tax (GST) in 2006. Following extensive opposition the proposal was dropped and an opportunity to reform the HKSAR tax system was lost. In comparison New Zealand (NZ) introduced in 1986 what remains the purest GST internationally, following a period of extensive consultation and coordinated publicity. This paper, through its comparative analysis, seeks to offer lessons for the HKSAR from the NZ experience, should the HKSAR decide to pursue once again a GST at some future time.
